day 1

Perhaps two days is not enough to experience everything it offers you. .
But it will be more than enough to fall in love with Malaga and want to come back.

We start our tour at the emblematic Calle Larios, important shopping area of Malaga, where the most exclusive shops are located, until we arrive at Plaza de la Constitution: heart of the city's old quarter.

From there we head west, along Calle Compañía where we find the Palace of Villalón (16th century), home to the Carmen Thyssen Museum Malaga, first stop on our route. This museum, inaugurated in March 2011, has a permanent collection of more than 200 works by 19th-century Spanish artists, centred especially around Andalusian painting and which makes up the most complete collection in Spain. Here we find works by such great artists as Valeriano Domínguez-Becquer, Eugenio Lucas Velázquez, Julio Romero de Torres and Joaquín Sorolla, among others. In addition, the museum counts on a careful programme of temporary exhibitions of undoubted artistic interest. It is definitely worth a visit.

Returning to Plaza de la Constitution, we can take time out to have a rest and enjoy a good Malaga breakfast in one of the cafeterias which are found in the area. A nice coffee with churros or a toasted sandwich will go down well. But please note it is important to know how to order a coffee in Malaga, because depending on the amount of coffee served, each has a different name. For example, a "café mitad" is half coffee and half milk and a "sombra" is three quarters milk and one quarter coffee. Furthermore, more coffee than milk is a "largo" and there are up to nine different ways to order a coffee. But there is no need to worry, the friendly waiters will help us to learn this typical custom of Malaga.

Rested and refreshed, we head east this time, and take Calle Santa María, which brings us directly to the Cathedral and its Museum. Although work on the Cathedral started during the Gothic period (16th century) with the old mosque of the Arabian city, the current building is of Renaissance style and is still unfinished. Funds ran out in 1782 and so work was stopped, leaving the south tower unbuilt. This led to it being given the popular nickname of "The One-Armed Lady". In front of the Cathedral is Plaza del Obispo and the Episcopal Palace (1762). This palace is, in reality, a collection of terraced buildings whose front façade gives a beautiful example of the baroque architecture of Malaga.

We go around the Cathedral along the last stretch of Calle Santa María, where we can contemplate the majestic Elizabethan facade of the Sagrario (side chapel), as we continue to Calle Cister, and come out onto the Palacio de la Aduana (1826), future home of the Museum of Malaga, which will exhibit the collections of the Provincial Museum of Fine Arts and of the Provincial Archeological Museum of Malaga. Next to it, and at the entrance to Calle Alcazabilla, we come across our next stop: The Alcazaba which, together with the Castle of Gibralfaro and the Roman Theatre, form the city's most important archeological collection.

The Alcazaba, built between the 11th and 14th centuries, was the palace fortress of the Muslim governors. It is built upon the remains of an older Phoenician fortress on the side of the mount of Gibralfaro, in a privileged position above the city. The grounds house an interesting exhibition room where ceramic materials of 11th to 15th century Muslim Malaga are on display.

This palace is connected to the Castle of Gibralfaro by a steep mountain pathway. Public transport is available in order to offer easy access to the fortress. We shall visit it later on.

Our next objective is the Roman Theatre which, situated at the foot of the Alcazaba, is an essential stop on our way. Built in the 1st century B.C., it was in use until the 3rd century A.D. After its restoration, the Roman Theatre of Malaga is used once more as a scenic space.

5 We continue along our route and head north up Calle Alcazabilla, arriving at Plaza de la Merced where we enter into the Picasso route of Malaga. Objective: Picasso Foundation. Birthplace Museum. A 19th-century building, where the artist was born and lived for the first few years of his life and where original works of Pablo Ruíz Picasso are on display, both in the permanent collection and also on loan. Ceramics, engravings, illustrated books and personal possessions of the painter and his family.

6 From Plaza de la Merced, we walk onto Calle Granada, at the entrance of which the Church of Santiago is found and where Picasso was christened. Of a Moorish Gothic style, building was started in 1487 and it is one of the oldest in the city. Its architectural beauty is enhanced by its artistic richness and value befitting the home of some of the most important brotherhoods who take part in the processions of the Holy Week of Malaga.

At some 200 metres from the church, and on the left, we arrive at the narrow Calle San Agustín where the Palace of Buenavista home of the Picasso Museum Malaga is found.

This is a 16th-century Renaissance-style building, with Moorish artisan details and a lovely watchtower, which has been extended with other constructions to house the collections of the Picasso Museum Malaga.

Opened in 2003, the museum displays 233 works by the Malaga artist, including paintings, sketches, sculptures, engravings and ceramics, which form part of the permanent collection, along with interesting temporary exhibitions.

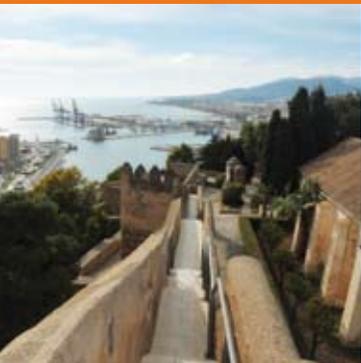

And now it's time to take a break and try the varied, rich local and international cuisine in one of the many establishments which are to be found in the old quarter of Malaga. Fried fish, white garlic and almond soup, Malaga salad, potato and fish soup with vinegar... And all accompanied by the delicious wines which Spain produces.

We take up our journey again and travel to our next stop: the Castle of Gibralfaro. On the way we walk down Calle Larios again, which will be bustling with people shopping. Something that, undoubtedly, we will have observed during our travels, and that we have taken advantage of to make a few purchases in some of the excellent shops found there.

Now in the Plaza de la Marina, we go to the start of the Paseo del Parque and head east to the bus stop of the number 35 bus which will take us to the Castle of Gibralfaro. Abderramán III made a fortress from the existing ruins at the top of the mountain, among them those of a Phoenician lighthouse and that is why the Arabs called it "Yabal Faruh" (mount of the lighthouse).

Later on, in 1340, the Nazari King Yusuf I, extended the grounds and built a castle. In the visitors centre, located in the old powder keg of the fortress, there is an exhibition which displays elements of everyday military life in the castle, throughout its history. Furthermore, we can enjoy the impressive views over the city and bay of Malaga, where we can see all the places which we have visited and those which we will visit next.

With this view in mind, we catch the bus which will take us back into town and where we get off at the bus stop in front of the Plaza de Toros "La Malagueta". We are, practically, at the door of our next stop: the Museum of Municipal Patrimony of Malaga.

This museum, opened in 2007, has historic and artistic items from the Municipal heritage on permanent display, from the 15th century to the present day.

Our next stopping point is found just in front of us. We cross the Paseo del Parque and enter the Paseo de la Farola (Lighthouse) which comes out onto the landmark which gives it its name: La Farola (1817), symbol par excellence of the city of Malaga. This lighthouse, along with that of Santa Cruz de Tenerife, are the only ones which are named in the feminine.

From the Lighthouse we can enjoy further spectacular views of the Port of Malaga and of the city, to whose old quarter we return by passing through Muelle 1, which contains a shopping and leisure centre, where we can take advantage of the exclusive establishments to do a spot of shopping and take some refreshment in some of the bars and restaurants next to the sea. We continue on through Muelle 2, transformed into a boulevard named The Palm Grove of Surprises. A pleasant area to walk and relax which brings us back to the old quarter, where we can enjoy a night out in Malaga before returning to the hotel filled with unique experiences and eager to see more.

Ciudad Genial!

day 2

There are so many things to see and do in Malaga, that two days seems little. So for the second day, it is necessary to choose a route. We suggest two alternatives.

Alternative 1 : Botanic and Contemporary Malaga.

We can make the most of today to get away and see Malaga from another perspective. Let's visit the Historic-Botanic Garden La Concepción.

This is the most beautiful and important tropical garden in Europe, created in 1855 by the Marquis of Loring, owners of the land which, thanks to their relation with important European personalities, cultivated the most exotic species imported from different places of the world. Fruit trees, bamboos, palm trees, vines, Mediterranean plants, water plants, etc., form distinct environments in which to wander and learn. Charming corners with ponds, fountains, waterfalls, little bridges, greenhouses, statues... An authentic spectacle of nature. At the same time, the marriage accumulated an extraordinary collection of archeological pieces, creating what was called the Loringiano museum and part of this collection is still on display today.

Once the visit to this fascinating garden is over, we return to where we started, the Alameda Principal, to continue on to our next point.

Moving west we arrive at the river and we follow it to Calle Alemania where the CAC Malaga - Centre of Contemporary Art of Malaga – is found. Situated in the old wholesaler's market, it shows works by the best contemporary artists, both national and foreign. Since its creation, it has become internationally renowned, not only for its permanent collection of artists as relevant as Juan Muñoz, Tony Cragg, or Signar Polke, among others, but also for its educational work and its extremely interesting temporary exhibitions by great figures from the artistic world stage. Works include, the "Man Moving" by Stephan Balkenhol and "The Blue Shadow" by Chema Alvargonzález, who are the new contemporary milestones of Malaga.

And now the moment has arrived to relax by the sea and taste its rich fruits. We shall travel to one of the most popular areas of Malaga: the Paseo Marítimo of Pedregalejo.

On the south side of the Alameda Principal, we can take bus number 11 or number 34, which take us to the beaches of Pedregalejo, where we can enjoy the typical cuisine of Malaga, in its seaside “chiringuitos” and restaurants: anchovies, skewers, shellfish, fried fish... Scents, flavours, beach, sun, peace.

A delight in every sense, which will make us want to come back and enjoy Malaga much more.

Alternative 2 : Traditional Malaga.

There is still much to see in the city and much to learn about the life and customs of its citizens. Let's make the most of the second day to explore traditional Malaga in depth and visit some of its interesting museums.

This time we'll start at the Plaza de la Merced and walk along Calle Álamos, heading west until we arrive at Calle Carretería. This street and the neighbouring area, trace the route of the wall of the Muslim Medina, of which we can find some traces along the way.

But before entering Calle Carretería, we will take a little detour to the left and look for Muro de San Julián street where the Museum of the Holy Week of Malaga is found.

Located in the old Hospital of San Julián, built at the end of the 17th century, its church conserves an important pictorial collection. It is conceived as a thematic, historic and patrimonial space, distributed among seven galleries which offer visitors an interesting journey through the history and development of Malaga's Holy Week. It is one of the most representative artistic/religious displays nationwide.

We now come out onto Calle Carretería, where half-way down and on the right, we take Calle Biedmas until we arrive at Plaza de los Viñeros where we find the Wine Museum of Malaga which we are going to visit.

We will learn all the secrets of this famous wine's production and after having tasted the different varieties, we may take some bottles of the one which we most like. A real pleasure.

We continue along the traces of the wall until we arrive at the river and turn south, along the Pasillo de Santa Isabel, to the Museum of Traditional Arts and Customs, located in an old 17th-century inn. A trip through Malaga's history and its traditional customs of the 19th century.

Afterwards, we make our way south to the Alameda Principal. But on the way, let's pay a visit to the Market of Atarazanas, so-called because it occupies the site which belonged to the Nazari atarazanas (shipyards), and where the original main door is still retained. It has always been said that if you want to know a city well, the first place to visit is its market.

The beauty of the facilities and the contemplation of the magnificent products which we have seen in the market has awakened our appetite.

Now is the moment to have some refreshment in a tapas bar or local establishment in the area, and finish, if we wish, by visiting the Pedregalejo seafront, to enjoy the magnificent and varied cuisine on offer in one of the numerous chiringuitos (beach bars).

A perfect end to our 2-day stay in this wonderful and luminous city of Malaga.

We have to come back.
